Developing Online Hybrid Courses

Description: This multi-part program focuses on key content decisions in the development of hybrid courses. In this special series, participants will (a) discuss the difference between “online content” and “face to face content” toward developing a shared understanding, (b) explore different ways to provide the same content developed for a face-to-face course for an online course, and (c) judge which components of their own course content would be best delivered online or in person to their students.

Presenter: Mr. Reginald Williams, Associate Professor, Department of Education

Dates: May 16, June 13 and July 11 (A separate topic will be presented during each session)

Time: 1:00pm - 2:00pm ES

Location: The workshops will be offered online as a webinar. You will not come to a room or building on campus. Instructions on how to access the webinar will be sent to you with your registration confirmation.

Making Your Online Courses More Interactive

Description: This workshop explores the use of Blackboard Collaborate, a virtual learning tool that can be used to make your online and hybrid courses more engaging and interactive.

Blackboard Collaborate allows the instructor to see and talk with their online students right from your computer. Students can also see and talk with the instructor. In this workshop, you will learn how to create a Collaborate session, use the tools and features, and record a session. You will practice using Collaborate by delivering a 3-minute lecture.
